EXCERPT

When Hector and his father arrived at the park, it looked like a bomb had dropped. There were feathers scattered around the duck pond, there were chairs and tables overturned at the café, there were ice cream cones scattered across the ground near the ice cream truck, there were kids crying by the swings, there were squirrels crying in the trees ... It was a mess and no mistake.

A police van was parked by the gate and a bunch of policemen were standing around. One of them was having his hand bandaged. Hector and his father approached them.

“Excuse me, officer,” said Mr Dumble. “You haven't seen a dog, about so high, brown, with sticky-uppy ears, have you?”

“Are you kidding?” said one of the police officers. “That's the canine who caused this salmagundi of discombobulation,”

“Pardon?” said Mr Dumble.

“The canis domesticus who instigated this cornucopia of pandemonium.”

“Eh?” said Mr Dumble.

The police chief came over. “Don't mind Larry,” said the chief. “He always uses big words when he's traumatized. What's the problem, sir?”

“Well, um, you see, the thing is, it's like this ...” said Mr Dumble.
