Return to Madison River Allen Andrew Cooper

Rowan and Sadie meet in college and fall in love, but life pulls them in different directions. They each chase their dreams. Rowan becomes a successful fishing guide and author as he travels, drinks and fishes his way through life. Sadie raises her two children, goes onto graduate school and returns to Montana. Their paths meet later in life but in a way that neither of them would ever have imagined. They return to the river where they laughed and played as young lovers, but their reunion is unexpected as this story delves into the truth of a man's journey through life, a woman's battle with Huntington's Disease and the power we all hold within. Rowan's fishing adventures take him all over the western hemisphere before returning him to Montana. The everyday takes on magical meaning with an inward sense of purpose as the lure of the river, scenery and characters make a statement of what it is to be human, to be in love and to care for another long after that love has waned. Rowan Sojourner was by turns a desperate young man on a brink of a decision that could prove tragic, a slightly older man who fell in love with an enchanting woman, an adventurer, a successful writer, a lover of women, a man who dared to dream. This book will make a reader sympathize, grieve and rejoice with the hero!
